Following a joyous sold-out show at Union Chapel, Jamie Woon announces his first full tour in a decade: 12 dates across the UK and Europe in April 2026, including London's Shepherd's Bush Empire and Paradiso in Amsterdam.

A cult artist and London soul pioneer with cosigns from Erykah Badu and Pharrell, Jamie has collaborated with Burial and Disclosure, written and produced for Elmiene, and built a devoted following on songs like Night Air and Sharpness. Now he's back.

For anyone who waited: these shows are for you. For anyone new: one of the most distinctive voices in British music, rhythms that sit deep in the body, songs that don't look away. Bolder, more at home in himself, with a band that knows exactly what it's doing.

Tickets go on sale at 10am, Friday 28th Nov HERE ahead of Jamie's Maida Vale session for Gilles Peterson, which airs on BBC 6Music on Saturday 29th Nov.

3, 10, Why, When is Jamie's third album, one that wasn't supposed to happen. After Mirrorwriting (2011) and the Mercury-nominated Making Time (2015), he disappeared. "I was haunted by the question of what's worth saying?"

The answer came through working with Swedish producer Martin Terefe at Eastcote Studios. "He sort of tricked me into making an album," Jamie says. "We made one song, then another, then when we had ten we just said that's the album."

Strange, spiky percussion gives way to lush strings. 3am thoughts sit alongside deep currents of love and belonging. Singing the torment becomes the remedy for that same torment.

"I don't really know how to explain this music. It's extraordinary to me that it exists at all."

Released on Jamie's own label, Also Can: Malaysian for "that works too."
